Queries

P. 84 – Dickstein is intense (what is it in that case?)

P. 89 – Why the KGB man says he “sir” to the Party’s secretary man instead of Tovaritch or Comrade Secrétaire maybe

P. 146 – dreaming is instead of worrying. Your King’s english is too good for me. could you explain, please, the meaning?

P. 164 – Bratsk? (Province, town or river?)

P. 174 – last paragraph: reads Petcov instead of Rostov – printer’s mistake, right?

P. 175 – Kensington shopping area is elegant I suppose.

P. 79 – My EDF’s engineer says you can’t break in a flask as easily as all that. Are you sure of your formula?

p. 188 – Lloyd’s of London Press (could it be their: Service de presse?)

Here it is, all for to-day

With all my apologies for my shortcomings and interrupting your work.

Did you see in the N Yorker Jan 20’s issue, p. 128 the advertising box from “Books on tape?”

Yours,

R
